

61 N. 17th St.,

New York, June 29, 1850.

My Dear Garrison,

In response to your very kind note I write merely to say that, unless hindered by some unforeseen event, we shall leave for Boston on Thursday morning; and if there is no detention of our train we hope to reach the Roxbury station about 6 p. m. The change in the weather leads me to hope the journey will prove pleasant. It will be a very great gratification to ^{both} Jenny and myself to spend a day at your house. Especially do I rejoice on Jenny's account in view of such an opportunity to see you and yours under your own roof.

The Yearly Meeting of Progressive Friends was very interesting and satisfactory, though your absence caused universal disappointment. I will give you further particulars when I see you.

Yours, faithfully,

Oliver Johnson.
